

EdVenture Children's Museum presents:

Garbagenas[®]

"Detritus-Educationus-Maximus"^{*}

Meet Garbagenas!

Sure she's trashy. She's "de-composed" of household trash and lives in a garbage can. But what's she doing there? Garbagenas is a fun, hands-on educational resource designed to help children learn about recycling, environmental science and awareness. Enter her home, reach inside her belly and you become a "garbologist," learning what should be recycled, reused, repaired or even composted. The program is littered with information about the recycling cycle, what happens to recyclables and what the difference is between non-renewable and renewable resources. Garbagenas is perfect for museum-based or outreach programs targeting children in pre-school through the 5th grade.

Her head is cabbage. Her tummy's a tire. Her arms are like celery. And her feet are old potatoes. She's litter-aly, litter education in a can.

Why Garbagenas?

Garbagenas teaches everyone that we should all be good stewards of our planet and that adults and kids alike have the power to choose what we do with our trash. Garbagenas has been known to start a "trickle-up" effect – when children teach their parents what to do with trash and change the way garbage is treated. Best of all, Garbagenas has the power to capture imaginations and gives students the power to decide what to do about our environment.

With environmental education, every little bit helps.
